The Joy of Love (Amoris Laetitia): A Reading of the Apostolic Exhortation of Pope Francis
Chapter Five: Love Made Fruitful

One of the principal maxims of Scholastic theology is “Bonum est dif-fusivum sui”—i.e., means, “Goodness spreads itself around.” Noted by Thomas Aquinas in the Summa Theologica, this precept tells how the pure goodness of the Father moves outward into the Son, and the goodness of the Son moves back to the Father. This cycle of goodness is the Holy Spirit. Likewise, the goodness at the heart of this trinitarian God spreads out into the void, creating the universe, filling it with love and order, with beauty and grace, with God’s own divine energy and goodness. Poured forth from the heart of God, this goodness unfolds in the order of nature and the spiritual and physical evolution of human beings. Each of us holds within herself or himself an element of that divine goodness, poured out in the creation, and restored to us through the emanation of love present in the incarnation of Christ and the descent of the Holy Spirit. Further, this love we are given seeks to grow and deepen within us, and longs to spread out into the world, just as the Trinity spreads out into creation.

In Amoris Laetitia, this medieval axiom emerges as a central dimension of love, which always results in an outpouring of life. As Francis says: “Love always gives life. Conjugal love ‘does not end with the couple. .
. The couple, in giving themselves to one another, give not just themselves but also the reality of children, who are a living reflection of their love’” (§ 165). For Francis, the good within a person draws her beyond herself, to life-giving relationships, which include, for many people, conjugal relationships. A loving person is drawn to others—not in a determinative fashion, but in the sense of nature complimenting our own happiness. One who loves seeks to be loved and to have a partner for his loving; i.e., a lover seeks a beloved. Insofar as we are healthy and whole, this desire for love leads us to be life-givers (even if we are celibate). And for those who are not celibate, this desire for love often leads to a conjugal union, which itself may become the source of new life to love: i.e., the means by which children are brought into the world.

In saying this, it is important to note that Francis is not suggesting that conjugal love is only life-giving if a couple produces children; rather, he is saying that the connection between the bearing of children and the act of conjugal love is appropriate, since children manifest the love which should be present in the self-gift of sexual intimacy. Children ought to be a living reflection of the love of their parents, and not a means to some other end. Likewise, a couple’s openness to new life in their sexual relationship is also an openness to a key dimension of love itself. Love gives life, always; therefore it makes sense that the physical act associated with love is also the act by which human life begins.

Nevertheless, while the connection of sexual love to reproduction may be appropriate, Francis is not so naïve as to believe that it is universal.
Just as many sexual encounters lack the spiritual qualities essential to love, so, too, many pregnancies occur not because the parents desire to “spread goodness,” but from other, often less noble motives. Thus, “from the first moment of their lives many children are rejected, aban-donated, and robbed of their childhood and future. There are those who dare to say, as if to justify themselves, that it was a mistake to bring children into the world. This is shameful!” (§ 166). Even while it is far too often true that a particular child may not be born of loving parents, each child—each human being—is a incarnation of love, and so cannot be a mistake, but must be loved and sustained, welcomed as a gift of God, “entrusted by the Lord to a father and a mother” (§ 166), who share in the mission of God, as illustrated by their power to “choose the name by which [God] himself will call their child for eternity” (§ 166).

Here, as in Laudato Si, Francis opposes the egocentric mentality that would reduce persons—especially children—to mere objects for the fulfillment or rejection of a consumer-minded parent: “He or she is not an accessory or a solution to some personal need. A child is a human being of immense worth and may never be used for one’s own benefit” (§ 170). The irreducible value of a child, in herself, means that she cannot be tossed out like last year’s iPhone, but has the right to be nurture and care, by which she can grow into the person she is meant to be. As those who have participated with God in the engendering of a child, parents hold the first right—and the first duty—to help their child grow into his own freedom and identity, although others may accept this duty and right, when parents are incapable or unwilling to follow through.

In this context of the rights and responsibilities of parents and children, Francis seeks to clarify a number of the Church’s teachings that often seem misunderstood. For example, while affirming that “large families are a joy for the Church” (§ 167), he also notes that a couple can and should be discerning in their decisions regarding parenting, “taking into account social and demographic realities, as well as their own situation and legitimate desires” (§ 167). Though the good seeks to spread, that good has multiple dimensions, and may not always include more children. Likewise, though he acknowledges that there may be times when families may not have both parents present (§ 172), he emphasizes the need for every child to experience the love of a father and a mother, since each provides different supports that are needed for “a child’s healthy growth to maturity” (§ 172).

In this nod to the controversial vision of complementarity of the sexes, upon which St. John Paul’s theology of the body rests, Francis walks a fine line: affirming the value of the feminist movement, while also asserting that such a movement “does not demand uniformity or negate motherhood” (§ 167); supporting the notion that women and men bring different gifts to parenting, while still noting “a certain flexibility of roles and responsibilities, depending on the concrete circumstances of each particular family” (§ 175). Here Francis seems to be speaking not so much as a systematic theologian, in search of clear categories, as he is a pastor, seeking to respond to concrete issues and circumstances. He wants to challenge Western culture, where “the father figure is said to be symbolically absent, missing, or vanished” (§ 176), and where “some fathers feel they are use-

Throughout the rest of Chapter Five, Amoris Laetitia argues that the expansive love at the heart of marriage emerges not only through the birth of children—though that may be a privileged expression—but through various dimensions of family and civil life. In adoption, where parents offer “the gift of a family to someone who has none” (§ 179), and in foster parenting: in all the ways in which couples, as couples, love and embrace the world, the fruitfulness of married love is made manifest. Indeed, even for those who cannot or do not have children, the love experienced in a family should be fruitful, leading those in the family “to bind the wounds of the outcast, to foster a culture of encounter, and to fight for justice” (§ 183). Inherently fruitful, married love does not set a couple apart from the world; rather, the love seeks to expand, drawing in parents and cousins, siblings and in-laws, the elderly and those in need of love. All of these enrich the loving family, and allow the good of the family to become that of society—and may act as an antidote to the current culture of consumption and despair: “Our contemporary experience of being orphans as a result of cultural discontinuity, uprootedness, and the collapse of the certainties that shape our lives, challenges us to make our families places where children can sink roots in the rich soil of a collective history” (§ 193). Goodness, which longs to spread itself around, needs the communion of family life, where ego and isolation can be overcome by practical and merciful love.

First Reading

Nathan said to David: “Thus says the LORD God of Israel: ‘I anointed you king of Israel. I rescued you from the hand of Saul. I gave you your lord's house and your lord's wives for your own. I gave you the house of Israel and of Judah. And if this were not enough, I could count up for you still more. Why have you rejected the LORD and done evil in his sight? You have cut down Uriah the Hittite with the sword; you took his wife as your own, and him you killed with the sword of the Ammonites. Now, therefore, the sword shall never depart from your house, because you have looked down on me and have taken the wife of Uriah to be your wife.’”

Then David said to Nathan, “I have sinned against the LORD.” Nathan answered David: “The LORD on his part has forgiven your sin: you shall not die.”

Second Reading

Brothers and sisters: We who know that a person is not justified by works of the law but through faith in Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Christ Jesus that we may be justified by faith in Christ and not by works of the law, because by works of the law no one will be justified. For through the law I died to the law, that I might live for God. I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live, no longer I, but Christ lives in me; insofar as I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God who has loved me and given himself up for me. I do not nullify the grace of God; for if justification comes through the law, then Christ died for nothing.

Gospel

A Pharisee invited Jesus to dine with him, and he entered the Pharisee’s house and reclined at table. Now there was a sinful woman in the city who learned that he was at table in the house of the Pharisee. Bringing an alabaster flask of ointment, she stood behind him at his feet weeping and began to bathe his feet with her tears. Then she wiped them with her hair, kissed them, and anointed them with the ointment. When the Pharisee who had invited him saw this he said to himself, “If this man were a prophet, he would know who and what sort of woman this is who is touching him, that she is a sinner.” Jesus said to him in reply, “Simon, I have something to say to you.” “Tell me, teacher,” he said. “Two people were in debt to a certain creditor; one owed five hundred day’s wages and the other owed fifty. Since they were unable to repay the debt, he forgave it for both. Which of them will love him more?” Simon said in reply, “The one, I suppose, whose larger debt was forgiven.” He said to him, “Your faith has saved you; go in peace.”

Live Mercy

Lord Jesus Christ,
you have taught us to be merciful, as the heavenly Father is merciful.
Help us to live mercy every day of our lives, through the compassion we show to your beloved ones:
to the migrant and the refugee,
to the homeless and the wounded, to those forgotten by this world, but remembered always in your love.
May the mercy we receive bear fruit in us, nourishing us with joy and bringing us communion with you.
May it allow us to become the sacrament of mercy, the Church, who consecrates the world to you, who live and reign with the Father, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, one God forever and ever. Amen.

Maternal/Child Health in Ethiopia

On Thursday, June 16th, from 7-8 pm, St. Joseph’s Faith Justice Commission is sponsoring an information meeting for parishioners to learn about, get involved with and financially support SCOPE. SCOPE is a partnership between the UW Department Of Global Health, the University of Gondar, Ethiopia, and U.S. and Ethiopian faith communities. It targets HIV/AIDS and maternal health - specifically vertical transmission of HIV from mother to infant. Enter SCOPE, which uses techniques that are inexpensive and proven to be effective; they use American and Ethiopian global health grad students to bridge this gap in an incredibly unique way by training priests and holy women to be medical advocates, in addition to being spiritual ones, and to advocate for antiretroviral treatment, along with holy water, urging pregnant women to seek antenatal care. Come learn how you can get involved and support furthering this important work. Feel Free to contact Deacon Steve Wodzanowski at 206-965-1646 or stevew@srtjosephparish.org or Project Manager parishioner Barbara Clinton at barbaralclinton@yahoo.com.

THANK YOU to those who have contributed to the 2016 Annual Catholic Appeal (ACA). The ACA gives St. Joseph Parish an opportunity to support the work of the wider church in Western Washington—the education of seminarians, support of retired priests and women religious, the work of Catholic Community Services, multicultural ministries, and so much more.

Through this one gift, each of us and all of us embrace those whom the rest of the world so often overlooks. This year, the St. Joseph Parish assessment for the ACA is $148,436. A significant amount, reflective of the generosity already shown in this Parish. While it is important to note that if we do not raise this amount through the ACA campaign we must make up the difference through our ordinary income, our hope is that this community will show itself ready to help both the local and the larger Church. Our witness, so important to Catholics throughout this region, relies upon each person’s willingness to act as part of this community.
