“The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure buried in a field, which a person finds and hides again, and out of joy goes and sells all that he has and buys that field.”

The Survival of the Beloved

[W]e have put together among ourselves a rigidly simple account of life in the world, which we honor with the name Reality and which, we now assure one another, must be faced and accepted, even or especially at the cost of those very things which societies we admire are believed by us to value, for example education, the arts, a humane standard of life for the whole of the community.

-Marilynne Robinson-

If you ever took high school social studies or college economics, you might recall the name of Thomas Malthus, the British cleric who, under the influence of Adam Smith’s The Wealth of Nations, sought to show that charity is ultimately counterproductive. Devising a graph which claimed to prove that care of the poor only increases the ultimate amount of suffering, Malthus’ work becomes a foundational support for the unrestrained capitalism that would mark 19th-century Britain. Indeed, his notion of the poor as “surplus population” is even quoted by Dickens, who puts that phrase into the mouth of his great opponent of charity, Ebenezer Scrooge. For the unrefomed Scrooge, as for generations of capitalist campaigners, the Malthusian Curve presents a “scientific” refutation of the misguided principles that emerge from those who take literally the New Testament teaching about feeding the hungry and clothing the naked. Altruism, it is argued, though an “instinct” of humanity, is counterproductive as social policy; whereas, the economic principles of capitalism, in which surplus labor is used until its numbers are reduced through starvation and exhaustion, leads society to greater progress and a higher aggregate of happiness. This, the argument runs, is not a matter of morality or ethics: it’s just science.

One reader who was profoundly influenced by Malthus’ scientific approach, was a young British naturalist named Charles Darwin, who proceeded to translate the Malthusian vision upon the whole of the natural world: asserting that evolution occurs from the constant battle of all against all for the possession of scarce resources. In such a world, competition replaces any other moral imperative, creating progress through the destruction of less well-adapted species and the preservation of better ones. For Darwin, this struggle for survival is also part of human community, dictating that superior races and cultures both compete with and eventually supplant lesser, primitive members of the species—which, for Darwin included those “primitive” aboriginal races around the world. And, whereas the instinct for compassion may be present in human beings, it exists only as a secondary stimulus, given to help animals (including humans) form communities and families, and thereby allow for a competitive edge. Rather than a choice emerging from a moral center (e.g., a divine presence within each person), ethics is merely a particular formulation of the drive for good-feeling, unnaturally extended by such works as the New Testament into some kind of moral law. Far from the Creation of a benevolent God, the Darwinian world is a battlefield, in which the progress of species depends never on cooperation, but only on successful competition, where the “virtuous” (i.e., fittest) survive and the “inferior” (i.e., less fit) perish. Any ethics that contradicts this competitive model becomes a potentially dangerous luxury, a kind of “political correctness” that undermines the natural progress coming from the competition of persons, communities,
Yet, for all the apparent science of Darwinian evolution, its blindness to its foundational bias—i.e., its prejudice towards competition, a prejudice grounded in both Malthus and the free market economics of its day—leads this theory to denigrate as "unnatural" the very observable experiences of cooperation and collaboration, of compassion and kindness, of human love and personal sacrifice. These, say the social Darwinians, are not only contrary to the ways of nature, but potentially hazardous to human development, since they allow the poor and less qualified to survive and reproduce, instead of culling them from the human herd, as one might cull a diseased animal. For this reason, various forms of social Darwinism, applying the principles of natural selection to economics and politics, have sought to isolate notions of religion and morality into the private sphere—i.e., matters of sentiment, but not of science—while promoting the "realism" of constant competition and the "natural selection" manifest by unregulated market capitalism, colonial imperialism, and various forms of "selective breeding." Either through scientific eugenics or through more subtle structures of prejudice and racial segregation.

In our own time, the Malthusian-Darwinian bias infects even those communities who profess to be religiously grounded—indeed, even those who profess to deny the theory of evolution itself. Such religious fundamentalists, while affirming the literal meaning of Genesis against the scientific evidence of evolution, marry Darwin’s notion of "survival of the fittest" to an apocalyptic eschatology built primarily upon parts of the Old Testament, the Book of Revelation, and a few passages of Paul. This religious reductionism—in which the social teaching of Jesus is rarely mentioned—is then merged with a theocratic vision of America as an essentially "Christian" (i.e., white Protestant) nation. From this comes the notion that spiritual survival depends on the same free market and libertarian principles one finds in natural selection. To these anti-Darwin Darwinists, the science of evolution may be wrong but the vision of the world is still the same: i.e., a struggle for survival in which all those who are not with us are against us. So it is that anti-evolutionary Pentecostals join with neo-Malthusian Darwinist libertarians in a strange alignment, whose premise is that the weak or "sinful" people (e.g., the poor, the marginalized, the disabled, those of other religious traditions) should be culled from the social structures, for the good of society. To support such people through government programs or refugee assistance, through labor laws or anti-discriminatory regulations only weakens the natural resilience of the market and the progress created by natural selection—or, in more religious language, the progress ordained by God for his chosen people.

Though often opposed by a parallel tradition of altruism and community, by ancient Christian values of sacrifice and cooperation, this Darwinian mythology of universal competition remains deeply ingrained in American culture, coming out especially in times of great fear. Indeed, this simplistic vision of reality as competition, where progress comes not through cooperation nor collaboration—not through one generation assisting the next to do better, nor through one community helping another to grow strong—feeds on fear. And those who understand this often manufacture fear to increase their own power. Rather than looking at immigrants and refugees as sisters and brothers, this fear-filled vision sees them as competitors and potential threats. Rather than lifting up the poor, the disabled, the powerless, so that all might prosper, this vision sees such groups as drags on society, who should be pushed down further, so as to decrease the surplus population. The fear of the poor—which prompted Malthus to argue against altruism, which was given a scientific veneer by Darwin and social Darwinism, and which is ordained as "divine will" to some religious fundamentalists—looks always towards enemies, and justifies numerous acts of injustice on the grounds that these perceived enemies threaten our survival by their very existence. Even if this perception is wrong, goes the thinking, we remain justified, since the fundamental law of reality is always survival.

This week—as the President of the United States tweeted that all transgendered persons would be forced from military service; as the Senate of the United States debated decreases in health care for millions of Americans, denying the very notion that such care is an intrinsic human right; as Immigration and Customs Enforcement continues to separate families and detain children—we can hear the echoes of Malthus and Darwin ringing through our national debate. But if we listen carefully, we can also hear the voice of Christ offering a very different message—a message that welcomes the residents of Tent City and the Saadawi family from Iraq, that makes sandwiches for St. Martin de Porres and brings food for St. Francis House, that stands in support of LGBT service members and offers refuge for those pursued by ICE, that refuses to survive at the expense of the other and that stands against fear with a "revolution of tenderness." The voice of Jesus tells us that our fear is a lie, and that survival does not come through victory in competition, but through generosity in love; not through the power of the weapon, but through the hope of the cross. Our survival comes in the resurrection of the whole community—every race and language; every creed and culture; rich and poor; man and woman; abled and disabled; gay, straight, and transgendered—and the only failure is to leave someone behind. This is the voice of the Kingdom, the voice we need to hear, the message we need to proclaim.

Prelude

Jesu, Joy Of Our Desiring

Jesu, joy of our desiring, holy wisdom, love most bright, drawn by thee, our souls aspiring soar to uncreated light.

Word of God, our flesh that fashioned with the fire of life impassioned.

Striving still to truth unknown. Soaring, dying, round thy throne.

Entrance Songs

(5&9:30) Sing, O Sing

1. Sing, O sing, like the wind and sea; let music fill the skies!
2. Night and day we announce your praise, O Lord of every land,
3. Make us shine like the stars of night; we bless your holy name!

Lift your voice like the thundering waves: let songs of praise arise!
Give you thanks for the sun and stars, all blessings of your hand.
Make our love like a blazing light; O set our hearts aflame!

Praise God with drums and dancing!
Praise God with flute and horn!
Help of all who labor,
Comfort to all who mourn.
Master of dawn and darkness,
Maker of shining star.

Blessed be our God,
Mighty Lord of all!
Praise to you, O God,
Mighty Lord of all!
Praise to you, O God,
Mighty Lord of all!

(5:30) Be Still

1. Be still and know that I am God. You are my chosen one, to
2. Be still and know that I am God. You are my chosen one, I
3. Be still and know that I am God. You are my chosen one, to whom my love I give. My life is yours, in you I live.

whom I show my ways. My love is with you all your days.

Be still, be still and know that I am

God.

First Reading
The LORD appeared to Solomon in a dream at night. God said, "Ask something of me and I will give it to you." Solomon answered: "O LORD, my God, you have made me, your servant, king to succeed my father David; but I am a mere youth, not knowing at all how to act. I serve you in the midst of the people whom you have chosen, a people so vast that it cannot be numbered or counted. Give your servant, therefore, an understanding heart to judge your people and to distinguish right from wrong. For who is able to govern this vast people of yours?"

The LORD was pleased that Solomon made this request. So God said to him: "Because you have asked for this—not for a long life for yourself, nor for riches, nor for the life of your enemies, but for understanding so that you may know what is right—I do as you requested. I give you a heart so wise and understanding that there has never been anyone like you up to now, and after you there will come no one to equal you."

Responsorial Psalm
Psalm 119

1. My part, I have resolved, O Lord, is to obey your word. The law from your mouth means more to me than silver and gold.
2. Let your love be ready to console me by your promise to your servant. Let your love come and I shall live for your law is my delight.
3. That is why I love your commands more than finest gold, why I rule my life by your precepts, and hate false ways.
4. Your will is wonderful indeed; therefore I obey it. The unfolding of your word gives light and teaches the simple.

Second Reading
Brothers and sisters: We know that all things work for good for those who love God, who are called according to his purpose. For those he foreknew he also predestined to be conformed to the image of his Son, so that he might be the firstborn among many brothers and sisters. And those he predestined he also called; and those he called he also justified; and those he justified he also glorified.

Matthew 13:44-52

“Do you understand all these things?” They answered, “Yes.” And he replied, “Then every scribe who has been instructed in the kingdom of heaven is like the head of a household who brings from his storeroom both the new and the old.”

Homily

Julian Climaco, S.J.

Jesus said to his disciples: “The kingdom of heaven is like a treasure buried in a field, which a person finds and hides again, and out of joy goes and sells all that he has and buys that field. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a merchant searching for fine pearls. When he finds a pearl of great price, he goes and sells all that he has and buys it. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like a net thrown into the sea, which collects fish of every kind. When it is full they haul it ashore and sit down to put what is good into buckets. What is bad they throw away. Thus it will be at the end of the age. The angels will go out and separate the wicked from the righteous and throw them into the fiery furnace, where there will be wailing and grinding of teeth.

All Are Invited To Come Forward

During communion, we invite all to come forward.

St. Vincent de Paul

Our St. Vincent de Paul volunteers visited a woman recently who had to quit her job so she could provide 24-7 attention to her mom, in her 90s, with a heart condition and suffering also from diabetes.

She needed help for this month’s rent. We provided that but something else perhaps even more important. Our visit with her ran well close to an hour. This woman, exhausted from non-stop nursing, really needed to talk with someone. Her small house was neat and clean, her manner humble and her gratitude heartfelt.

“Mom’s Social Security covers our costs most months,” she said. “But this month, her medicines, an appliance repair bill and all just ran us out of money. “I really need a break.” A friend, it turned out, was going to spell this woman for three days just so she could lay back. “I shouldn’t be heaping all this on you,” she told us.

In-home visits by St. Vincent de Paul volunteers are of utmost importance. It’s a personal way to let people in need know they are not forgotten, have people who care about them, and need not be ashamed to ask for help. Your contributions each month make this possible. Thank you.

The monthly St. Vincent de Paul collection is next week on August 5th & 6th.

Blood Drive

Every week Bloodworks Northwest collects about 4,500 blood donations. That’s equivalent to enough donors to fill 14 Boeing 747s! This summer, spring into action by giving blood at your upcoming blood drive!

Monday, July 31st - St. Joseph Church Parish Center
1PM to 7PM - (closed 3PM - 4PM)

To make an appointment, please email Renee Leet at rleet@stjosephparish.org. For questions about eligibility, please call 800-398-7888

FAQ’s:
Yes, you CAN donate if you’ve had a flu shot
Yes, you CAN donate if you have a tattoo
Yes, you CAN donate if you are a diabetic – as long as you are healthy you are able to give
Yes, you CAN donate if you are taking blood pressure medicine, as long as your blood pressure is within range

Dear Brothers and Sisters, Good morning!

The brief similes proposed in today's liturgy conclude the chapter of the Gospel of Matthew dedicated to the parables of the Kingdom of God (13:44-52). Among these are two small masterpieces: the parables of the treasure hidden in the field and of the pearl of great value. They tell us that the discovery of the Kingdom of God can happen suddenly like the farmer who, ploughing, finds an unexpected treasure; or after a long search, like the pearl merchant who eventually finds the most precious pearl, so long dreamt of. Yet, in each case the point is that the treasure and the pearl are worth more than all other possessions; and therefore when the farmer and the merchant discover them, they give up everything else in order to obtain them. They do not need to rationalize or think about it or reflect: they immediately perceive the incomparable value of what they've found and they are prepared to lose everything in order to have it.

This is how it is with the Kingdom of God: those who find it have no doubts, they sense that this is what they have been seeking and waiting for; and this is what fulfills their most authentic aspirations. And it really is like this: those who know Jesus, encounter Him personally, are captivated, attracted by so much goodness, so much truth, so much beauty, and all with great humility and simplicity. To seek Jesus, to find Jesus: this is the great treasure!

Many people, many saints, reading the Gospel with an open heart, have been so struck by Jesus they they convert to Him. Let us think of St Francis of Assisi: he was already a Christian, though a “rosewater” Christian. When he read the Gospel, in that decisive moment of his youth, he encountered Jesus and discovered the Kingdom of God; with this, all his dreams of worldly glory vanished. The Gospel allows you to know the real Jesus, it lets you know the living Jesus; it speaks to your heart and changes your life. And then yes, you leave it all. You can effectively change lifestyles, or continue to do what you did before but you are someone else, you are reborn: you have found what gives meaning, what gives flavour, what gives light to all things, even to toil, even to suffering, and even to death.

Read the Gospel. Read the Gospel. We have spoken about it, do you remember? To read a passage of the Gospel every day; and to carry a little Gospel with us, in our pocket, in a purse, in some way, to keep it at hand. And there, reading a passage, we will find Jesus. Everything takes on meaning when you find your treasure there, in the Gospel. Jesus calls it “the Kingdom of God”, that is to say, God who reigns in your life, in our life; God who is love, peace and joy in every man and in all men. This is what God wants and it is why Jesus gave himself up to death on the cross, to free us from the power of darkness and to move us to the kingdom of life, of beauty, of goodness and of joy. To read the Gospel is to find Jesus and to have this Christian joy, which is a gift of the Holy Spirit.

Dear brothers and sisters, the joy of finding the treasure of the Kingdom of God shines through, it's visible. The Christian cannot keep his faith hidden, because it shines through in every word, in every deed, even the most simple and mundane: the love that God has given through Jesus shines through. Let us pray, through the intercession of the Virgin Mary, that His Kingdom of love, justice and peace may reign in us and in the whole world.
