Memory, Tradition, and Justice

Tradition is not wearing your father’s hat; tradition is begetting a child.

-Pablo Picasso-

The self-engaging activity of our liturgy not only causes us to remember who we are: it invites us to commit ourselves to a life congruent with our identity. All liturgy is anamnesis.

-Mary Collins-

In one of the essays of his oddly titled but wonderful book, The Man Who Mistook His Wife for a Hat, the neurologist and essayist, Oliver Sacks, tells the story of Jimmie, a man who suffered a severe brain injury that left him incapable of forming new memories after a particular day in 1945. Minute to minute, things appear and then disappear to Jimmie. Aggravations, joys, people, places: all are experienced by Jimmie for a moment, but none are held in memory and so disappear virtually immediately. And though, unlike some Alzheimer patients, he is fully capable of the normal functions of life, Sacks discovers that his inability to ground and retain new memories has a powerful effect on Jimmie’s sense of self. As he writes: “One day I asked him [Jimmie] not about his memory, or past, but about the simplest and most elemental feelings of all: ‘How do you feel?’ ‘How do I feel,’ he repeated, and scratched his head. ‘I cannot say I feel ill. But I cannot say I feel well. I cannot say I feel anything at all. ‘ ‘Are you miserable?’ I continued. ‘Can’t say I am.’ ‘Do you enjoy life?’ ‘I cannot say I do. . . ‘ ‘You don’t enjoy life,’ I repeated, hesitating somewhat. ‘How then do you feel about life?’ ‘I can’t say I feel anything at all.’ ‘You feel alive though?’ ‘Feel alive? Not really. I haven’t felt alive in a very long time.’ His face wore a look of infinite sadness and resignation.”

Without memory, how could Jimmie know if he were happy—how could any of us know—since joy and sorrow both exist in the flow of memory, as responses and recollections to events and people who enter our lives? Far from a thing of the past, memory is a present phenomenon, by which we hold and redeem all the moments of our life into a present self, who is moving into an as yet uncreated future. As the philosopher and theologian, Søren Kierkegaard says, we are “everything we have ever done, plus freedom.” So it is, that memory is not some mere recollection of past events, it is a present reality, by which given moments transcend their own individual occurrence and continue to exist and shape the depths of our being. We are, to a very great extent, the memories which live through us. And though we often think of memory as some sort of day-planner in our brain, where we store facts for later access—e.g., “Where did I put my keys? What time is that class?”—what the story of Jimmie illustrates is that memory is something more, something constitutive of and foundational to our identity. Over time, as all the cells in our bodies change, as our hair gets grey, as we grow taller (and then maybe shorter again)—indeed, as even our eyes change color—we remain ourselves because we retain some sense of ourselves over time. Memory is the source of character and habit, the root of knowledge and learning; it empowers our consciousness with a sense of duration and basic sensations such as cause and effect; and even when we have memory lapses (“Where did I put those keys?”), the very notion of lapse depends upon the experience of being oneself across time. Without such a living memory, who would any of us be?

This sense of living memory—which, in the Greek of the New Testament, is called anamnesis—is also at the heart of our experience as Christians, i.e., a constitutive element of the Church itself and an essential dimension of our Christian identity. When Jesus says to his disciples, on the eve of his passion and death, “Do this in memory of me,” he is not simply asking them to wax nostalgic about the good old days; rather, he is commanding them (i.e., commanding us) to make present again, to re-member, his life and his death and his resurrection through a living relationship with those events in the sacrifice of the Mass and in the life of the Church. The “real presence” of Christ in the Eucharist and in the Church emerges through the acts of remembrance by which what happens in Jesus’ life happens in every community that bears his name and in every person who recalls—by word and action—his sacrifice of love. Just as we are constituted by the memories we hold of our own lives, so too, as Christians, we become Christ by making the memory of him a part of ourselves. We re-member Christ in our own lives and in our community, and so become the Sacrament of Christ for the world. This relationship between identity and memory is why tradition—the anamnesis of Jesus in the history of the Church—holds such power in Catholic theology, and why the argument from tradition holds such sway in conversation about the exclusion of women from ministerial priesthood.

The Argument from Tradition

While the gospels themselves are products of tradition—i.e., the memory of Jesus as experienced in the early apostolic communities—they have a special status because of the Church’s acceptance of their inspired origin (as declared in the Council of Nicaea in 325, which approved the canon of Scripture). So it is that, as discussed in last week’s column, the argument from Scripture is “in the mind of the Sacred Congregation, the decisive one,” when it comes to the inability of the Church to ordain women to the priesthood. Yet, if Scripture is, as the Congregation believes, decisive, it is not unquestionably clear, since—as the Congregation acknowledges—there is no direct teaching by Jesus against the ordination of women, only the interpretation by the Magisterium of the “example of the Lord.” Thus, to demonstrate that this understanding of Scripture remains consistent with the living memory of the Church, the Congregation supplements the scriptural arguments for the ban with arguments it sees as drawn from the post-apostolic tradition, i.e., the living memory, of the Church.

Throughout Inter Insigniores and John Paul II’s later document Ordinatio Sacerdotalis, the argument is presented that, as John Paul II says, “Priestly ordination, which hands on the office entrusted by Christ to his Apostles of teaching, sanctifying, and governing the faithful, has in the Catholic Church from the beginning always been reserved to men alone” (Ordinatio Sacerdotalis). While acknowledging that “a few heretical sects in the first centuries, especially Gnostic ones, entrusted the exercise of priestly ministry to women,” Inter Insigniores emphasizes that the teaching of the early Fathers of the Church, as well as documents taken from both the Antiochene and Egyptian traditions condemned such practices and consistently held that only men could be called to priestly Ordination, saying that this stricture way “willed by the Lord Jesus Christ and carefully maintained by the Apostles.” Further, it is argued, the “same conviction animates medieval theology,” though, as Inter Insigniores notes, the question does not really come up directly after the the approval of the Church by Constantine—when Christianity becomes integrally aligned with the civil structures in both the Eastern and Western empire (a point that some critics point to as an influence that may well have skewed the development of the tradition).

In the end, the argument from tradition relies primarily on the universal experience of the Church, i.e., on the consistency of the ban on women priests in both the ancient churches of the East and those of the West. Why did this memory of Jesus and the Apostles exist in multiple and diverse communities and churches when so many other innovations were introduced, unless that memory was rooted in the universal identity of the Church itself? Further, the reasoning goes, the absence of a specific dogmatic teaching on this ban only reinforces its traditional and unwavering history. As Inter Insigniores says: “The Church’s tradition in the matter has thus been so firm in the course of centuries that the Magisterium has not felt the need to intervene in order to formulate a principle which was not attacked, or to defend a law which was not challenged. . .The same tradition has been faithfully safeguarded by the Churches of the East. Their unanimity on this point is all the more remarkable since in many other questions their discipline admits a great diversity.” Thus, argues the Magisterium, the ban on women’s ordination come not only from Scripture, but from the shared memory of the Church, which affirms the current interpretation of Scripture. To advocate or accept the ordination of women, thus, changes a feature of the Church’s very identity, and risks alienating us from other churches and our own history.

However, while tradition remains—of necessity—a fundamental feature of the Church, it relies, ultimately, on the argument from Scripture, since on its own tradition must always be conditioned by discernment and by an openness to other factors. “We have always done it this way” may provide a necessary part of any explanation for a practice, but it cannot be a sufficient rationale on its own, unless supported by something more. Otherwise, the Church risks making accidents of history absolutes of dogma, and risks missing the living Spirit by which memory remains alive. As Pope Francis says in his recent exhortation “On the Call to Holiness in Today’s World”: “Let us ask for the apostolic courage to share the Gospel with others and to stop trying to make our Christian life a museum of memories. In every situation, may the Holy Spirit cause us to contemplate history in the light of the risen Jesus. In this way the Church will not stand still, but constantly welcome the Lord’s surprises.” So it is that we cannot accept that women should not be ordained simply because they have not been ordained in the past; rather, we must analyze and explore that data rigorously, both to see what we have missed and to determine if what we presume is the will of God or our own eternalized inertia.

If distinguished from the argument of Scripture, tradition becomes quite fragile. For if elements of the tradition have been suppressed, then our understanding of the tradition may be flawed, in much the same way that the recovery of a personal memory—suppressed by an injury—damages an individual’s sense of him or her self. Thus, the mosaics found in Rome—which seem to show a vested woman, leading worship—are so important, since they may indicate that our understanding of our history is incomplete. If we are to rely on the tradition, we must also ensure that the tradition on which we rely is not, itself, distorted by prejudices contrary to the gospel or by influences that emerge from the biases of the cultures in which the early Church grew. Thus, while the tradition and the memory of the Church are important, these traditions themselves must be opened to dialogue, lest we trap the living Spirit in the amber of our misguided devotion.

First Reading
After the man, Adam, had eaten of the tree, the LORD God called to the man and asked him, “Where are you?” He answered, “I heard you in the garden; but I was afraid, because I was naked, so I hid myself.” Then he asked, “Who told you that you were naked? You have eaten, then, from the tree of which I had forbidden you to eat!” The man replied, “The woman whom you put here with me—she gave me fruit from the tree, and so I ate it.” The LORD God then asked the woman, “Why did you do such a thing?” The woman answered, “The serpent tricked me into it, so I ate it.” Then the LORD God said to the serpent:

“Because you have done this, you shall be banned from all the animals and from all the wild creatures; on your belly shall you crawl, and dirt shall you eat all the days of your life. I will put enmity between you and the woman, and between your offspring and hers; he will strike at your head, while you strike at his heel.”

Responsorial Psalm
Psalm 130
Haugen

With the Lord there is mercy, and fullness of redemption.

From out of the depths, I cry unto you, Lord, hear my voice, come hear my prayer. O let your ear be open to my pleading. Ref.

If you, O Lord, should mark our guilt, then who could stand within your sight? But in you is found forgiveness for our failings. Ref.

Just as those who wait for the morning light, even more I long for the Lord, my God, Whose word to me shall ever be my comfort. Ref.

Second Reading
2 Corinthians 4:13-5:1
Brothers and sisters: Since we have the same spirit of faith, according to what is written, I believed, therefore I spoke, we too believe and therefore we speak, knowing that the one who raised the Lord Jesus will raise us also with Jesus and place us with you in his presence. Everything indeed is for you, so that the grace bestowed in abundance on more and more people may cause the thanksgiving to overflow for the glory of God. Therefore, we are not discouraged; rather, although our outer self is wasting away, our inner self is being renewed day by day. For this momentary light affliction is producing for us an eternal weight of glory beyond all comparison, as we look not to what is seen but to what is unseen; for what is seen is transitory, but what is unseen is eternal. For we know that if our earthly dwelling, a tent, should be destroyed, we have a building from God, a dwelling not made with hands, eternal in heaven.

Gospel

Mark 3:20-35

Jesus came home with his disciples. Again the crowd gathered, making it impossible for them even to eat. When his relatives heard of this they set out to seize him, for they said, “He is out of his mind.” The scribes who had come from Jerusalem said, “He is possessed by Beelzebul,” and “By the prince of demons he drives out demons.”

Summoning them, he began to speak to them in parables, “How can Satan drive out Satan? If a kingdom is divided against itself, that kingdom cannot stand. And if a house is divided against itself, that house will not be able to stand. And if Satan has risen up against himself and is divided, he cannot stand; that is the end of him. But no one can enter a strong man’s house to plunder his property unless he first ties up the strong man. Then he can plunder the house. Amen, I say to you, all sins and all blasphemies that people utter will be forgiven them. But whoever blasphemes against the Holy Spirit will never have forgiveness, but is guilty of an everlasting sin.” For they had said, “He has an unclean spirit.” His mother and his brothers arrived. Standing outside they sent word to him and called him. A crowd seated around him told him, “Your mother and your brothers and your sisters are outside asking for you.” But he said to them in reply, “Who are my mother and my brothers?” And looking around at those seated in the circle he said, “Here are my mother and my brothers. For whoever does the will of God is my brother and sister and mother.”

One Parish, One Prisoner

Guest Speaker - Chris Hoke, Underground Ministries
Wednesday, June 13th - 7:00 pm to 8:30 - Parish Ctr

One Parish, One Prisoner matches up a faith community with an incarcerated man, while in prison, to help with their re-entry into society before and after their release.

Our parish has been matched up with Diego who is scheduled to be released in early 2019. Our stakeholder’s team has started the process by exchanging letters and visiting him in prison. We just completed the first visitation a few weeks ago and will continue to do so on a monthly basis.

The hope is to involve our larger parish community in embracing Diego and being a resource and support for him for the remainder of his time in prison and after his release. We have already learned that he hopes to pursue a career in Graphic Design and are looking for parishioners with this professional background who can mentor and guide him. We will also need resources for housing, etc. when he is released. All of us benefit when someone in Diego’s situation is able to successfully reenter society and make a positive contribution.

We have formed a parish stakeholders team. The team has participated in several trainings and visited Monroe Corrections Complex. They are: Jill Heiney-Smith, Linda Ellis, Leslie Overland, Al O’Brien, Vince Herberholt, Paige Pratter and Deacon Steve Wodzanowski.

Come and hear the inspiring story of One Parish, One Prisoner from Chris Hoke and “Neaners” who lead the efforts for this pilot at Underground Ministries.

Tuesday, June 12th - 7:00pm – 9:00pm - Parish Center

Please join the St. Joseph Racial Justice in America Book Group for study, reflection and opportunities for action and solidarity on issues of race in America. Our book read this month is “Why Are All the Black Kids Sitting Together in the Cafeteria and Other Conversations about Race” by Beverly Daniel Tatum, PhD. We will also be setting aside time to pick books for the fall and perhaps a summer read. Come with your selections! One possibility we’re looking at is reading Dr. Robin DiAngelo’s new book, White Fragility, perhaps over several months. We particularly encourage men in the parish to participate. This group provides a safe space for the exploration and discussion of difficult issues, with the ultimate goal of discovering for each of us how to live the Gospel message in light of the sin of racism so alive in our country today. Please RSVP to Mary de Rosas at mderosas@pnwimmigration.com or Deacon Steve at stevew@stjosephparish.org or 206-965-1646. We look forward to you joining us!

St. Joseph Church
732 18th Avenue East
Seattle, WA 98112

Dear Father John and the community of St. Joseph,

On behalf of everyone at the International Rescue Committee in Seattle, please accept my deep appreciation for your donation of $2,894 dated May 15, 2018. We are so grateful for support from your community which sustains the resettlement work we started in the Seattle area in 1976 and allows us to implement new initiatives to better meet the needs of refugee families and survivors of trafficking.

Thanks to community support like yours, last year the IRC in Seattle achieved the following:

- We resettled 213 refugee families (619 individuals) from 14 countries, including Afghanistan, Iraq, Somalia, Ukraine, Iran, and Eritrea.
- We helped 170 newly-arrived refugee youth enroll in school and provided additional support to 250 young people through tutoring, career readiness, and community exploration activities.
- 150 families grew fresh, organic produce at our New Roots gardens.
- We helped 300 people become naturalized US citizens.
- We helped about 75 women and men find their first jobs in the US.
- 70 survivors of human trafficking achieved safety and accessed services.
- We provided intensive case management support to 100 refugees with additional needs and started a new program to better connect elderly refugees to their new communities.
- 673 dedicated Washingtonian community members contributed over 20,000 hours of volunteer service.

We are so grateful for the constant support and encouragement from your parish and the school! We hope to see some of you at our World Refugee Day celebrations on June 20!

Once again, thank you for continuing to welcome refugees and your gift!

With best regards,

Nicky Smith
